

ARTICLE No. 4: The good, the bad... and the alone?

“...assemble your entire mind and memory: turn them into the ground where your treasure lies hidden.” Meister Eckhart (1260-?1329) Book 1, page 12. Trans. C. deB. Evans, 1924.

Year 2012 marks world cultures struggling for both domination, and for healing. The state of the 10th monad is that we all believe we are the ones who are the right leaders. The recognizable indigenous/aboriginal cultures worldwide, many remaining in their seemingly timeless history, have not dominated other cultures but some have survived the appearances, flowerings, and declines of the dominate 9, and now 10th monad. There is much to be honest with where we are regarding the domination of those cultures, even still within the 10th monad as it is today.

So, what is the 10th monad, the 10th monad that will shape and dominate world history? How are we doing with that? What will it be called? Shall it be called the “Global God Wars” age, where all the planet is afire with the struggle for worldwide supremacy of religion and economics? Or shall it be named in honor of the geological epoch that found itself affected most strongly not by tectonics, erosion, or other geological transformation, but instead by how we changed the history of earth’s geology through our technology, this for the first time in Earth’s long geologic story? Is the “age of emancipated information, technology and science” going to be the name of our age? With our heads in the sand, we can say, yes, of course, “there is nothing wrong with technology, it has enhanced the quality of our existence. “ In many ways it has. But we also know and well understand the ethic of expediency and efficiency, time and money. That the autonomy and moral infancy of this liberated ethic brings us genocide, war and wasting of natural resources: this too we understand and cannot deny. As

Lewis Mumford said: “Too many thought not only that mechanical progress would be a positive aid to human improvement, which is true, but that mechanical progress is the equivalent of human improvement: this turns out to be sheer nonsense.”

With the bad and the ugly out on the table, now we can look to the improvement of our condition! Since we dominate the planet in every way, we walk in space and pick up rocks on Mars, then perhaps it might be time to discover and create a significant unity of mankind, a colossal vehicle which might prepare us for a new age? To do just that, we might ask the question: why, for so many, are the old gods dead, or well on their way? So how do we find a unified, moral majesty for our age, a cosmology that includes all of humanity?

The time for an overarching cosmology of true unity may be right here under our noses. It may have been here awhile already! It's easy to see that the conditions for its coming have always been here; at the same time so much has already been accomplished! Courageous lives brilliantly lived have already arisen and flowered. All over the planet fresh visionary ideas, philanthropy, mandates, and inventions germinate for the future health of the planet.

Surely the “my light is better than your light, because I saw the light first”, age is now waning! For many of us, the guru top-heavy soul-collecting systems are not working so well either. I wonder how many of us are searching for a unified centering cosmology, one that unifies all mankind not just our favorite groups? I also wonder if we are searching for a unified experience - not projected from the brain, but centered in the heart? Are we not constantly looking at identities and appearances in nature that are imbued with love? We surely perceive more and more the epiphany that whispers of the universe and its spectacle of awe and transcendence, do we not? But, it seems, these endless bits and pieces experienced by individuals around the planet leave us still ruminating in isolation in front of our plastic monitors, safe in our dome of ONE.

Without a cosmology that connects us to each other, not in the mind, not as an idea, but as a rational, universally recognized experience of divinity, we are still in spiritual crisis catapulted toward death and the darkness of outer space...ALONE. Perhaps we have been taught that the notion that we alone are the architects of our labyrinth, our quest for wisdom? So then, here we are. Here I am. If I believe I am alone when I inhale, I blunder on my path, a spiritual midget marked by doubts, questions and error, walled in by my ignorance and my pretensions. If I believe that I am not alone when I exhale the maze of my mind, my visions of science, art and spirit, the mystery of who I am assures me that there exists a unified human experience. The very breathing of my soul, shows me the tangled heart of who I am, perhaps who we all are. Concealed within is face of the monster who assures me I am alone. In the same heartbeat, the breath of God replaces that face. Then, even for a moment, I see clearly. I get back to work.

I propose that the finding the “Holographic Heart of the World” can be the vital spiritual connection that is real, that globally catalyzes the realms of right action as well as spirit. Like the eye of a hurricane, it makes sense that our inner being can join a worldwide unity of purpose. At the same time, my inner world would like to feel that the really big outer world, like the universe itself, might actually work with us to find and sustain this new sentient paradigm. It also makes sense that our cause might be helped if we were to truly understand that if we come from the stars, then the stars are our extended family.

The next article in the series will address our true lineage, the true genealogy of humanity, the science of our elemental nature. This foundation, understanding the really small so we can get to the really big, is the way I have learned to live in the Holographic Heart of the World. So the next chapter tells the story of the once upon a time that is still now, and the land far, far away that is right here, inside us. Our ancestry in the stars leads us to “God Particles ‘n Us” ™, which is the door to the Holographic Heart of the World. This then shows us that indeed, perhaps with more tools and a lot more

God, we may be qualified to save the planet. It is a big plan. But it is based in the notion that if the view from above (we are not alone) becomes truly believable, then the view from within is born: "I am in the Holographic Heart of the World living in a unified cosmology." Our culture's 10th monad becomes not the seemingly ruinous, dominant, littered flood of meaningless information; it is that of the avatar no longer alone.

© Jennet Inglis, 2012

POB 791 Staunton, VA 24402 540.480.0868 ptdthunder2@yahoo.com